Re: US v. LAWRENCE E. CRAYTON III, CR 07-0803-MMC

Dear Elizabeth:

Today, the case agent informed me that since the time of conducting the ticket number analysis, he has learned that the ticket numbers repeat after the entire number sequence is completed. Because of this fact, the computer analysis that a particular ticket number was invalid as of August 29, 2006 (when the analysis was done), may not necessarily mean that the same ticket number was invalid when Crayton submitted the false voucher.

I have asked the case agent to reexamine the validity of the ticket numbers. He hopes to have his analysis completed by Wednesday. In the interest of time, I am sending to you the previous analysis on public ID numbers, which I previously invited you to look at but did not send to you. If you recall, a ticket number is composed of a three digit Julian calendar date, 4 digit employee public ID number, and the remaining 6 digit ticket number. A ticket number will be invalid if the first 3 digits do not correspond to a Julian calendar date, or if the following 4 digit employee ID number is invalid or does not correspond to an employee from the originating city.
